Carole Feuerman's Swimmer Sculpture Comes Ashore in SoHo's Petrosino Square

Pin it 146 | Tweet | Like | 0 Comments | SHARE

The oddest of the summer's public art offerings thus far has got to be Carole A. Feuerman's hyper-realistic — right down to the beads of water on the figure's arms and inner tube — which since May 20 has been installed in SoHo's Petrosino Square.

The large-scale painted bronze sculpture, a conventional bust re-imagined for the sporty set, is on loan to the city's Department of Parks and Recreation from Feuerman and Jim Kemper Fine Art. The New York-based artist debuted the first version of "Serena," a painted resin sculpture, at the 2007 Venice Biennale, and it subsequently took top honors at the 2008 Beijing Biennial.

The sculpture, "Survival of Serena" (2012) is on view at the north tip of the tiny triangular park at the three-way intersection of Cleveland Place and Spring, and Lafayette streets through September 23.
